

Dig into fall

By KIRSTEN MATTHEW

Last Updated: 11:35 PM, September 5, 2012

Posted: 11:06 PM, September 4, 2012

Hungry for something new? Whether you're looking to chow down or swan around, dozens of dining options await you this season.

THE SWEETEST THINGS

Expect to pack on the pounds this fall as a trio of authentic French bakeries and two cookie stalls set up shop in Manhattan. Maison Kayser (1294 Third Ave.; 212-744-3100), the first New York outpost of the famed Parisian boulangeries (there are 25 in the City of Light), opened in August (another will open at 921 Broadway in mid-November, and a third at Bryant Park in early December). The massive space sports 104 seats, Paris-trained bakers and a two-story facility where the bread, made with sourdough and organic flour, and pastries are handmade.

"New York clients are demanding, but I also find them so friendly," says owner and master baker Eric Kayser. "They can recognize good quality."

Yann Le Deoux turns out exquisite loaves at rapidly expanding Maison Kayser.